

Lack of work ethic and leadership is apparent not just in the air traffic control towers run by the FAA, as reported widely in the news. A dearth of motivation pervades the entire organization.

A few years ago, an FAA employee did something horribly obscene in front of a female engineering contractor. The next day, in spite of (or because of?) her advanced education and her attempts to develop "perfect airspace" solutions, the woman was fired. So rather than go back to another FAA contractor position, she used her talents to produce Budget Justified, a movie, web series, and video-short reenacting what she witnessed in FAA and contractor offices. The book, "Budget Justified: The Waste, Fraud & Abuse of Government Workers" goes into the story deeper than the webisode series/movie. Dr. Schaefer describes how each scene of the movie relates to exactly what happened in real life while she worked in FAA offices as a government contractor. She also tells the reader about the behind-the-scenes action of shooting each episode of Budget Justified.
